

Navigating Meaningful Dialogue with your Teen

In this age of emails, texting, and social media, parents are looking for ways to have meaningful dialogue with their teenagers. Adolescence can be a difficult time for both teens and their parents, however it is a time when communicating is extremely important. While teens are off of their routine during the summer months with employment or just spending more time away from home, the need for communication is critical.

Parents are invited to listen to a panel of professionals and community members engage in conversation about keeping a healthy relationship with children during the teen years. There will be an opportunity for questions and answers.
